

History of the Internet The Internet originated from research projects funded by the U.S. Department of Defense in the late 1960s. It evolved from a network designed for communication among academic and military institutions to a global public network. Today, it is fundamental to commerce, social interaction, and media.